After waiting for almost 1 hour for the room key, the first thing I wanted to do was change and jump onto the bed. I met an old friend from department on my way up and another in the elevator.

As I wandered the hallway trying to find my room, I remembered my training days of getting lost. Soon enough I found my room and walked in. Just as I opened the closet to keep in my bags, I noticed a set of uniform hanging in. I walked further into the room only to realise that I had a roomie.

Now, I didn't have siblings and had my own room; so I never had to share a room with anyone. Nor have I ever stayed a hostel. The thought of having a roomie was exciting but it made me nervous at the same time. I looked around the room to see if I could find out who it was. I already saw the uniform in the closet so it was definitely an HK girl.

I peeped around the room to see if I could find anything. Trying to do my best Patrick Jane The Mentalist analysis, I came to the conclusion that there were two people staying in the room. Though there was only one toothbrush. I called up my manager and told her about the situation and the fact that I had to be quarantined for 24 hours. It wasn't safe for me to have a roomie. But she said it's okay so I let it go.

I informed my parents and my very caring friends that I finally got a room and a possible roomie. It was weird and awkward to settle in the room occupied by stuff so I settled on the sofa with my blanket. I ordered room service for lunch and slept on the sofa. I did some calculations about the shift hours and came to the conclusion that she wouldn't be back till at least 11. Bored of being alone for too long, I accepted an invitation to dinner in cafeteria with my colleagues. We ended up on the poolside chitchatting for almost 2 hours.

On my way back to the room I was a bit hopeful that my roommate will already be back in the room. Being an HM professional, I unlocked the room, knocked and announced myself. I gingerly walked in only to find the room still empty. Crestfallen, I called back my bestfriend. While she was having fun teasing my hair, my room door popped open. My roommate was back.

"Hii," I squeaked as she entered. It was the same girl met in the elevator. She just happened to be a friend of one the best people I met at work. She told me that her roommate was transferred to another room to be quarantined (P.S: was surprised to find that my deductions had been right). She tried to apologize for the mess, but I was just happy to see a familiar face.
